

1. Which characteristics of professionalism were neglected in "Work Scenario with Coworkers"?

Answer:

Both respect and punctuality were disregarded in the first scenario. The individual caused friction and disturbance in the workplace by arriving late and acting in an unkind and rude manner toward a colleague.

2. Was the principle of humanness practiced during the resolution in "Work Scenario with Coworkers"?

Answer:

Yes, in the second scenario, the humanness principle was applied. The worker apologized for being late and for being nice and considerate. This created a positive mood and showed empathy for others, which improved the work environment.

3. Were the employees conscientious in "Work Scenario with Supervisor"?

Answer:

The employee in the first scenario was not conscientious since they prioritized personal matters over taking accountability for their professional performance. By politely accepting the criticism and resolving it, the worker in the second instance showed greater professionalism and diligence.

4. Was the use of communication principles effective in resolving "Work Scenario with Supervisor"?

Answer:

Yes, in the second scenario, the issue was resolved mostly through excellent communication. After the worker politely listened to the supervisor's worries and spoke in a professional manner, the disagreement was resolved and a positive dialogue took place.
